The sheer number of people in a group affects the amount of communication. Consider the difference between communication between two friends and communication in a group of five people. When friends talk, there are two people sending and receiving messages. In a group of five, there are five people doing the same thing! Each idea that's expressed must be understood by four others, who may also choose to respond. Consequently, the greater number of people in a group, the fewer contributions any individual may make. Because participation is linked to communication, larger groups may generate less commitment to decisions than smaller ones. Large groups with eight or more members may also be less cohesive than smaller ones.

Because there are disadvantages to large groups, you might assume that small groups would be the most effective. However, groups can be too small as well as too large. With too few members, a group has limited resources, which eliminates a primary advantage of groups for decision making. Also, in very small groups, members may be unwilling to disagree or criticize each other's ideas because alienating one person in a two- or three-person group would dramatically diminish the group. Most researchers agree that five to seven members is the ideal size for a small group.

83. The main idea of the second paragraph is that
A) a very small group has limited resources
B) members of small groups rarely criticize each other.
C) small groups are superior to large groups.
D) small groups can have disadvantages.
84. Research indicates that the best size for small groups is
A) 4 to 5
B) 7 to 9
C) 2 to 3
D) 5 to 7
85. The author suggests that communication in large groups is a problem because ...
A) one or two of the members usually take over.
B) there is little opportunity for each person to speak.
C) the group is likely to have limited resources.
D) with more people, there is too much noisy talk.
86. The author suggests that ...
A) criticism may be more freely expressed within small groups.
B) communication is critical for decision making by groups.
C) small groups are worse than large ones for making decisions.
D) small groups are always more efficient than large groups.

The induction stage occurs during the first few years of teaching and is the time when teachers are socialized into the profession. During this time, the new teacher works for acceptance and attempts to become comfortable with teaching on a day-to-day basis. This may be a time when the beginning teacher finds a location or situation where he or she "fits." Teachers may move from building to building or grade to grade until they find a situation where they feel most comfortable. The stress of beginning a new profession may be compounded by other events in individuals' lives. New teachers are usually adjusting from viewing themselves as students to having a full-time job and getting to know a new community. They are dealing with issues related to personal relationships, finances, and activities outside of work. It is an exciting time for new professionals, albeit a busy and stressful one.

During this stage, many school districts provide support in the form of experienced mentor teachers to help induct new teachers into the profession. Mentors provide new teachers with a support system by acting as peer coaches, helping with planning, sharing ideas, introducing school routines, judging appropriateness of assignments, and explaining the context of specific teaching situations. Mentors ease new teachers into the profession and increase the possibilities that they will stay in the teaching field for a longer period of time. This is an important role for an experienced teacher because 40 to 50 percent of new teachers leave teaching after seven years or less. New teachers who receive appropriate mentoring during their first year or two in the profession continue to learn, grow, and develop more positive attitudes toward the profession.

87. Which sentence best states the main idea of this passage?
A) New teachers who have mentors have more positive attitudes.
B) Many school districts provide mentors for new teachers.
C) New teachers must often get to know a new community.
D) The induction stage for teachers is an exciting and challenging time.
88. According to the passage, what percent of new teachers leave teaching after 7 years or less?
A) 10-15%
B) 20-25%
C) 30-35%
D) 40-50%
89. The author's main purpose is to ...
A) convince more people to become educators.
B) argue that teaching is a difficult profession.
C) describe the induction stage for new teachers.
D) compare teaching to other professions.
90. The author shows bias in favor of ...
A) providing teachers with greater job security.
B) providing mentors for new teachers.
C) keeping teachers in the same school building for years.
D) raising teachers' salaries.
